

Washington DC used to have a great alternative radio station. It got bought out by some big corporation and the last time i listened in the morning, three obnoxious jerks rattling on about sports and breasts. If its not that, then a limited playlist that loops repeatedly.

People pay for satellite radio to get away from the FM crap, and as long as they are paying customers, they have just as much a right to local traffic and weather in the XM venue, as they do to all the other programming.
